

Presenter: Dr Clive Pearson

Dr Clive Pearson is currently a research fellow within the strategic research centre for Public and Contextual Theology (PaCT),
Charles Sturt University. He is a member of the executive of The Global Network for Public Theology and Editor-in-Chief of The International Journal of Public Theology. His current areas of research are in the fields of climate change, the Anthropocene and theology and also the relationship of the Christian faith to Islam.

Session 1 Is it already too late?

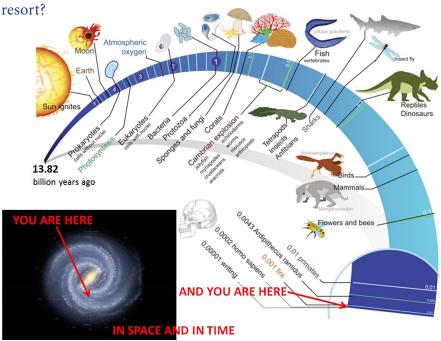

The contemporary proposition in geology is that we are now moving out of the Holocene into the Anthropocene –The Age of Humans. The Anthropocene presents us with a complex knot of questions to do with adaptation, mitigation, justice and the possible extinction of humans and other species. The Anthropocene poses questions that will continue to stretch our humanity and our politics.

Session 2 Living gently in the Anthropocene

What might the transition from the Holocene to the Anthropocene mean for people of religious faiths? What might be the role of religion and spirituality in a period, where the prospects for our life together, do not seem too promising? Will hope become a last DATE: Saturday March 10, 2018 Time: 9.30am-12.30pm.

PLACE: Catherine McAuley Room 6 Victoria Road, Parramatta, NSW, 2150

RSVP: valda.rsm@gmail.com

Parking in grounds or church parking area opposite